

PRESIDENT MACRON MET WITH UK PM BORIS JOHNSON IN G20 OVER FISHING LICENCES

DIALOGUE OF THE DEAF

Paris, Washington DC, 31.10.2021, 21:00 Time

USPA NEWS - The French President Emmanuel Macron of France met with the UK's Prime Minister, Boris Johnson, this morning, on the margin of G20 Italy Summit, in order to smooth up the tensions that occurred as regard of the fishing licences (Asked by the French fishermen), since the Brexit was signed up, 30 December 2020. In the light of the tensions between UK and France, over the fishing licenses, Boris Johnson told the EU chief , Ursula Von Der Lyen, in Rome, on the margin of G20 Italy, Summit, that "substantial gaps remain between [the two parties'] positions, including on the issue of governance, and noted that real progress must be achieved soon," according to the Downing Street statement. "The PM underlined the need to agree solutions rapidly to safeguard the Belfast (Good Friday) Agreement and reduce disruption to families and businesses in Northern Ireland,"We actually publish, below, this full statement as it was issued, from 10 Downing Street (Source: 10 Downing Street). As it is referring to Post Brexit, One would wonder and question and, even regret, why there was no trilateral meeting between the two countries in question, and the EU' boss, Von Der Lyen for a better arbitration?

In the light of the tensions between UK and France, over the fishing licenses, Boris Johnson told the EU chief , Ursula Von Der Lyen, in Rome, on the margin of G20 Italy, Summit, that "substantial gaps remain between [the two parties'] positions, including on the issue of governance, and noted that real progress must be achieved soon," according to the Downing Street statement. "The Prime Minister underlined the need to agree solutions rapidly to safeguard the Belfast (Good Friday) Agreement and reduce disruption to families and businesses in Northern Ireland,"We actually publish, below, this full statement as it was issued, from 10 Downing Street (Source: 10 Downing Street). Despite the presence of the three leaders, on site, in Rome, President Macron, the PM, Boris Johnson and the head of the European Commission, Ursula Von der Lyen, bilateral meetings took place without moving this touchy issue forward. One would wonder and question and, even regret, what there was no trilateral meeting between the two countries in question, namely with the leaders of UK and France as well as the President of the European Commission, Ursula Von Der Lyen (Who is present at the G20 Italy and met UK's PM Boris Johnson, alone) ... to orchestrate the exchange and negotiation, and enable a better arbitration, between the two heads of state who seem to get bogged down?-----

The dispute between the French and the British is not confined to fishing licenses (90% attributed by the UK to French fishermen according to the French rating, and 98% according to the British rating) which would only be the face visible from the iceberg, which will have frozen the relations between these two allied countries, and historically long-standing friends, because other more thorny subjects, such as that of the protocol of Northern Ireland and that of the migrants from Calais (dimension French Channel). « The Prime Minister underlined the need to agree solutions rapidly to safeguard the Belfast (Good Friday) Agreement and reduce disruption to families and businesses in Northern Ireland. » (Source : 10 Downing Street) All of this results directly from the first consequences of post-Brexit (signed on January 1, 2021, after four years of negotiations), and therefore falls under the arbitration of the European Union, even if each of the two countries has any the legitimacy of defending one's own national interests.-----

One would wonder and question and/or, even regret, what there was no trilateral meeting between the two countries in question, namely with the leaders of UK and France as well as the President of the European Commission, Ursula Von Der Lyen (Who is present at the G20 Italy and met UK's PM Boris Johnson, alone) ... to orchestrate the exchange and negotiation between the two heads of state who seem to get bogged down?-----

This is how at the end of a bilateral meeting, between UK 's Prime Minister Boris Johnson, and French President Emmanuel Macron, on their own, would've been held in Rome for about thirty minutes this morning, without any their advisers, and no journalist, or photographer ... The result was a deaf language, drowned out by two versions (official communication from 10 Downing Street) and indications from officials of the Elysee, with blurring gaps the message, made incoherent .

At this stage of the negotiations and given the unprecedented nature of this meeting, we are only able to publish the official British press release, because the Elysee has not published any, on the French side.

STATEMENT BY UK PM MEETING WITH FRENCH PRESIDENT MACRON : 31 OCTOBER 2021-----

Prime Minister Boris Johnson met French President Macron today at the G20 Summit in Rome. Published, 31 October 2021

« The Prime Minister met French President Macron today at the G20 Summit in Rome. The Prime Minister and President Macron looked forward to next week's COP26 Summit, which they agreed must be a decisive moment in the fight against climate change. The Prime Minister thanked President Macron for France's leadership and ongoing support to climate vulnerable countries. The Prime Minister raised the Northern Ireland protocol, which he said was the most important issue currently affecting UK-EU relations. The Prime Minister stressed the need to urgently agree a solution in order to protect the Belfast (Good Friday) Agreement, including on governance. The leaders discussed fishing licences. The Prime Minister reiterated his deep concern over the rhetoric emanating from the French Government in recent days, including the suggestion by the French Prime Minister that the UK should be punished for leaving the EU. He expressed his hope that the French Government would de-escalate this rhetoric and withdraw their threats. »
